

one particular poo but is extremely unlikely to break the habit completely – after all, what’s the incentive?

- Muzzle. Don’t use a muzzle to stop your dog eating poo – it doesn’t stop them wanting to eat it, just their ability to do so. Cleaning a muzzle covered in poo is often more unhygienic than your dog eating it in the first place.

Dog eating cat poo

Does your dog eat poo out of your cat’s litter tray? The best solution is to take the temptation away and put your cat’s litter tray somewhere your dog can’t get to – perhaps use a lidded tray or put it somewhere only accessible by cat flap?

When to contact your vet / behaviourist

If your dog has suddenly started eating poo, call your vet for advice. It’s a good idea to have a vet check-up before starting any training or seeking advice from a behaviourist.

You know your dog best. Contact your vet if you’re concerned.
