

- If they pass any urine, try collecting some to check if it looks unusual, contains blood, or anything gritty.
- Also check for urine around the house - your dog may change where they pee if they are in pain.

Step three: Call your vet

- Being unable to pee can be a life threatening condition. Call your vets ASAP if your dog is unable to pee, don't wait to see if they improve.
- Call your vet for advice if your dog has any other urine problems such as peeing more regularly, only passing small amounts of urine. These symptoms can indicate a problem such as a urine infection, a prostate problem or bladder stones - all of which can lead to much more serious issues if they are left untreated.

Published: March 2020